He's John Latour, Now in the Tombs-Says He Heard the Shot and Jumped on the Cab Step and Saw a Pistol in the Bookmaker's Hand—She'll Be Tried.

Another man has been found who says that he saw Bookmaker Caesar Young shoot himself on the day that he was found dead in a cab with Nan Patterson. This man is John Latour and his present address is Cell 439, the Tombs.

He has pleaded guilty to larceny, and has been in jail before. He came to light vesterday in the following letter, which he sent from the Tombs to the lawyers for Nan Patterson:

Do you remember the red headed fellow who looked in the window and showed you where the drug store was? I am the lad. I didn't come to the front until I saw the stories in the newspapers. I was there when they looked in the window, but they went away as soon as they seen it. I lived where it happened. If I can do you any servio at present, locked up.

Latour's story, as he told it to the lawyers and Warden Flynn, is that on the day of the shooting he was working for the Henry E. Frankenberg Company, dealers in yarns at 457 Broome street. His wife was ill and he started home to see her. As he was walking down West Broadway, on the west side, below Beach street, a cab came alongside of him and he heard a shot. He looked in the cab window and saw a man with his head resting on a woman's lap.

with his head resting on a woman's lap. There was a revolver in the man's right hand, he says.

Latour declares that he ran with the cab for a half a block and then jumped on the cab step and looked in. The man still had the revolver in his hand.

"I said to the woman." Latour's story goes on, "'You'd better drive over to that drug store across the street.' Then I jumped off the step. The cab went ahead and I went home. I told my wife about what I had seen and she told me not to say anything about it. She told me that my word wouldn't be taken because I had been in trouble. I was working at the time. I had been in jail before and I knew that if I was locked up I wouldn't get anybody to bail me out. This thing has been worrying me and I am locked up now anyway. I told a lot of people where I worked what

Miss Patterson's lawyers went to Mr. Jerome at once with the story and Assistant District Attorney Rand sent for Latour and examined him. Latour's home was at 269 West Broadway, which is about three blocks from where the policeman stopped the cab with Young dead in it.

Mrs. Latour says that his story of having told her, and of her advice to him, is absolutely true. Latour mentioned O. W. Toennies's as the drug store to which he told the woman in the cab to drive. That

Friends of the accused girl pointed out yesterday that Algeron Meyers of Jacksonville, Fla., who said that he saw the shooting, but was dropped as a witness by the District Attorney, declared that he saw a red headed man jump on the cab step. Latour is red haired.

Mr. Couch said that while he felt sure that Mr. Hazelton saw something of what happened in the cab he didn't think he was at all positive as to how the shooting was done. Mr. Hazelton, after Mr. Rand got through with him, went to Oneonta with a subpena calling for his appearance before the Grand Jury on Wednesday.

The driver of the cab and Hyman Stern, the pawnbroker, who says he sold the pistol with which Young was shot, were also before Mr. Rand. So was Coroner's Physician O'Hanlon, who examined Young after his death. Dr. O'Hanlon tried to illustrate to Mr. Rand how Young was shot and how he received the bullet wound which caused his death.

Mr. Rand refused to discuss the new phase of the case yesterday. All he would say was: "I never talk about evidence in a case that I am going to try." This meant that Nan Patterson will face a jury. It was BRIDGEPORT, Conn., Nov. 2.-William S. Sargeant while hunting for game in Fairfield this morning had occasion to climb over a stone wall. In doing so he rested his gun against the wall. Then he reached over the wall and grasped the gun by the muzzle and pulled it toward The trigger struck against a twig and the gun was discharged. Mr. Sar-geant's head was almost entirely blown off. Besides a widow, a son, E. R. Sargeant of Lynn, Mass., survives him. Sargeant was 55 years old.

CHOOSING A ROCHESTER BISHOP. Meeting of Bishops Called to Suggest a Condjutor for Mgr. McQuaid. Archbishop Farley has called a meeting of the Bishops of the New York province to pass upon the names selected for Co-adjutor Bishop of Rochester, N. Y., on Nov. 9. The irremovable rectors and diocesan consultors of the Rochester diocese have already chosen the Very Rev. Thomas F. Hickey, Vicar-General of the diocese and rector of St. Patrick's Cathedral, with the Rev. E. J. Hanna, professor of dogmatic theology at St. Bernard's Seminary, Rochester, as second choice. A third name will be chosen before the Bishops con-

The delay has been occasioned by the fact that the present incumbent, Bishop McQuaid, who is 51 years old, asked Rome fact that the present incumbent, Bishop McQuaid, who is 21 years old, asked Rome for permission to appoint an Auxiliary Bishop, owing to his extreme age.

"This has not been granted," said an eminent ecclesiastic, recently returned from Rome, to a Sun reporter, "because the Propaganda declines any longer to grant permission to Bishops to select and appoint their own auxiliaries. If a Bishop wants an assistant he must have a coadjutor and not an auxiliary. The reason for this is that a Bishop has the power to select who shall be his Auxiliary Bishop, but has not the choosing of his coadjutor. An auxiliary has no right to succession to the see, but the coadjutor is chosen by the clergy through their removable rectors and diccesan consultors, and the most acceptable to the public and the clergy is likely to be chosen. In the case of an auxiliary a man entirely unsatisfactory may be appointed by the incumbent of the see. Such being the case, a Bishop could practically will his position to a favorite, who would naturally succeed because he was Auxiliary Bishop and could not be readily turned down by the clergy of the diocese.

"In the case of Archbishop Farley's selecting and appointing Auxiliary Bishop tousack," continued the ecclesiastic, "the condition is somewhat different, because the archdiocese is so large that it will always require an assistant Bishop to carry on the work, and the choice will in no way affect the choosing of the successor to the say in the final selection. If the Bishops do not agree upon the names sent in by the clergy a second selection will be made by them, and the two in conjunction with the minutes of the two meetings will be sent to the Papal Delegate at Washington, who in turn will forward them to Rome.

The favorite candidate is the Rev. E. J. Hanna, who has been a hard worker in the diocese of Rochester, and is a student well known in Rome, where he lived for several years.

DYING MAN INSURED. Black Hand" Complaint Leads to Indictment of Two Capperellis. Two brothers named Capparelli, one a foreman in the Street Cleaning Department and the other a banker and saloon keeper at Elizabeth and Hester streets, were arrested on the charge of having swindled the Equitable Life Assurance Society out of $3,500. The brothers were arrested at their home 404 Broome street, by Detective Sergeants McNaught and when he was arranged in the follows police court Cortese did not deny that he had written the letter, but he said that there was no "black hand" in it. The money was due to him for "services rendered," he said, and then told this story:

FORGIVES BROTHER FOR SHOT

SAILOR JIM WOULDN'T SEND - JUNKMAN PAT TO JAIL.

But Court Packs McGuire, Who Once Owned an Ancient Copy of Shelley's Poems, Off to Bellevue to See if He's Insane -Jim Hopes to Quarrel a Lot More.

Patrick McGuire, who at the age of 60 years got into a bad temper on Tuesday and shot his brother, Jim, aged 67, in the shin with a little popgun of a pistol, was sent to Bellevue Hospital yesterday by Magistrate Cornell to be examined as to his sanity. Both the brothers were in the Tombs police court in the morning, and the elder and more genial Jim only had a rag around his leg and a slight limp to show for his hurt.

"I don't wish to make any charge, your Honor," said brother Jim, who has been a sailor and looks it.

"What's the reason you don't?" inquired the Magistrate.

"Well, he's my brother," replied Jim. "That's the reason. We had a quarrel. We've had quarrels always, and I expect we'll have a lot more. It's queer if two brothers can't have a quarrel without one sending the other to jail."

"If your brother is responsible for his acts he ought to be punished," said Magis-

Brother Pat, who is little and thin and weazened, and looks older than his older brother by a good deal, is almost stone deaf. While his fate was hanging in the balance he stood holding his right hand behind his ear in what was evidently a vain effort to catch the drift of what was going on. His face, with its dull eyes and its straggling face, with its dull eyes and its straggling effort at a military mustache and imperial had a feeble, puzzle-headed expression.

"We'll see what the doctors say as to his responsibility," said the Magistrate finally. At Bellevue last evening the report was that Brother Pat was quieter, but that he would remain there the customary three would remain there the customary three days for observation.

The quarrel between the two brothers had to do with a copy of Shelley's poems. Brother Pat has been for many years in the junk and miscellaneous rubbiah business, including old books and magazines and literary odds and ends. He was sure that a copy of Shelley's poems which he owned for years was worth several thousand dollars. His brother Jim, whom he had not seen for a good while, because Jim, old as he was, had been knocking about a tess, turned up about a year ago, and soon after seen for a good while, because Jim, old as he was, had been knocking about at seg, turned up about a year ago, and soon after Brother Pat missed his copy of Shelley. He accused Jim of stealing it and had him arrested. But nothing came of it. Brother Jim said he knew nothing about the book. The brothers parted for a time, but Jim later on became a pretty steady visitor at the junk shop at the southwest corner of Varick and Houston streets, and the neighbors around there said the two appeared to be the best of friends. But, according to Brother Jim's statement, they quarrelled pretty regularly about one thing and another. When there was a scarcity of topics to have a fuss about Brother Pat would bring up the missing copy of Shelley.

Brother Pat's home was at 125 Croshy street, and when Brother Jim went around there Friday night he found Brother Pat equipped with an old-fashioned French pistol of .22 calibre and a particularly nasty temper. The pair began quarrelling. Brother Pat fished the ancient pop-gun pistol out of his pocket and it went of somehow, the ball glancing on Brother Jim's shin.
